

Dr. Oana Săndulescu, MD, PhD, is currently Assistant Lecturer at the Carol Davila University of Medicine and Pharmacy, Faculty of Medicine, Department of Infectious Diseases and specialist physician (in Infectious Diseases) at the National Institute for Infectious Diseases “Prof. Dr. Matei Balș”, Bucharest, Romania.

She has earned her PhD degree in 2015 with the thesis “Identification of remnant bacterial prints” and is currently Romanian national representative at EUCIC (European Committee on Infection Control). She has published more than 35 articles in international journals, and has presented over 100 papers at national and international infectious diseases conferences. She is involved in clinical practice and medical research alike and her current fields of interest include microbiology, virology and host-pathogen interactions.